YOU must understand that the waiter and all the other servants of a European hotel make their living out of the tips that are given them. The hotel pays the employees nothing in the case of waiters, and next to nothing in other cases with the understanding that the guests will pay them. If the guests fail to pay them, the

I shall not say that this is a very agreeable habit, but it is a very agreeable one in the eyes of the waiters, where Ameri-

Here Is the Ingenious Code of Secret Signs On Your Baggage by Which the Hotel Servants Know Your Tipping Habits to a Dot

HOW THEY SPOT THE E-Z MARK ABROAD

"A tiny mark on the traveller's baggage reveals his tipping propensities to the whole world of hotel servants."

I think I may say that a man who has once omitted to tip will either give up the habit of travelling in Europe or learn to tip. A simple little mark on the traveller's baggage will tell the whole world of hotel servants just what his character is. This mark is understood in every hotel of good class from Buenos Aires to St. Petersburg.

It has been stated that the way a hotel label is pasted on has some significance. This is a mistake. The story is told by a little chalk mark, made so unobtrusively that the owner is not likely to notice it. It can be rubbed out, repeated or modified as experience suggests.

The high-class hotel waiters are a very united body bound together by a strong sense of loyalty and duty to one another. They are united in local unions here and there, but they are bound together all over the world by a beautiful sense of fellowship. They speak French, German, and English. They travel backward and forward between the same hotels.

Any valuable piece of information possessed by one member of this noble fraternity soon becomes the property of the whole body, and I may say that information concerning the generosity and integrity of a traveller is especially valued. We are not arrogant or greedy. We recognize the necessity of educating a traveller up to an understanding of how to tip properly.

When a traveller has shown by his manners that he is "green"—inexperienced in travelling—the hotel porter puts a quarter circle in the upper left hand corner of his trunk or valise. Every servant then takes particular pains to help the traveller to understand how much he should give.

A liberal tip is accepted with an emphatic "Thank you, sir," a moderate tip with a silent, shy motion of the hand and an insufficient tip with a marked look of interrogation. If the coin offered be ridiculously insufficient it may even be returned with a polite hope that the giver will buy himself a drink with it.

We feel that with an inexperienced traveller we can permit ourselves a considerable freedom in suggesting a wise liberality in tips.

A little straight upright mark placed on each side of the lock means "very liberal." Such a gentleman may be what you Americans call "an easy mark." We call him a gentleman. Every porter hastens cheerfully to carry his baggage.

When a traveller is "no good," the hotel porter feels impelled by a beautiful sense of duty and fellowship to mark a straight horizontal mark on the upper right hand corner of each piece of baggage.

This man omits to tip. He seeks to rob us of our hard-earned livelihood. He must be made to suffer, and he is. It is not infrequently happened that a whole tureen of hot soup has fallen down such a man's neck, but the highest class of waiters disapprove of such coarse methods. There are a hundred more refined ways in which this man's life may be made miserable. I he wishes to catch an early train, the waiter and the cook and everybody concerned are called else where just when he wants his breakfast.

Then his baggage is sure to miss the train, and will appear to be nobody's fault but his own. This is perhaps the most effective method of punishing a mean man.

He will be seen rushing frantically for the train on a hot day loaded down with his own baggage while porters are unavoidably called away by their duties.

Sometimes we feel compelled to give a "no good" man an additional mark meaning "absolutely no good." We go round the corner from the straight horizontal line, and on the end of the piece of baggage we place an ominous "V." A man of this character will call upon a waiter for special service, keeping him up after twelve o'clock at night, and yet fail to tip. I shrink from describing the methods that are resorted to discipline such a person. Happily it is but rarely that we are forced to proceed to these extreme measures.

A diagonal mark in the lower left hand corner of the baggage means "a disagreeable crank." This is an indication that the traveller does not positively omit tips, but gives very small ones and is extremely exacting in his requirements.

Then we have a mark which means "a crank, but good." This man tips liberally, but is very exacting in his demands for attention and other disagreeable. I must say that he receives the best service of all. We cannot think of punishing him, because he tips liberally. Then we cannot show him any solicitude or indifference, because he is sure to complain to the manager. Your "crank who tips" leads a life of enviable luxury.

cans are the most numerous guests. When the traveller omits to tip, a poor, hardworking hotel servant loses part of his livelihood. We are a humble, kindly, grateful, and hard class, but we cannot easily stand by and be robbed of our living. We cannot let the loved ones at home go in want without making an effort for them. Even a waiter will turn a poor little chambermaid for that matter.

We have devised a means of protecting ourselves from the dishonesty of patrons who omit to tip. Experience has proved that our methods are effective.

Why I Am Going to Climb the Highest Mountain in South America

MISS ANNIE S. PECK has started out to climb a mountain 24,000 feet high just because another woman, Mrs. Bullock Workman, made a remark about her. "In September, 1908," said Miss Peck, "I made the ascent of Mount Huascarán in the Peruvian Andes, which I believed to be the highest mountain in South America, the apex of the continent. A Peruvian engineer measured the height as 25,000 feet. The Peruvian Government gave me a gold medal inscribed 'Huascarán, 24,000 feet.' Mrs. Bullock Workman, who has been happy to see plenty of money and a mountain climbing record of her own, doubted my record. She claims to have climbed 23,000 feet in the Himalayas. She was accompanied by her devoted husband and half a dozen sturdy Swiss guides. They seem to have been able to assist or carry her up as far as 22,000 feet, but had to leave her there. Dr. Workman went on to 23,384 feet. Dr. Workman called this a world's record, although W. W. Graham had climbed Mount Kailash in the Himalayas, which is nearly or quite 24,000 feet. The Workmans were only able to claim a record by questioning their predecessor's feat.

When Mrs. Workman heard of my Huascarán climb she sent a party of engineers, at vast expense, solely to measure the height of Huascarán. This party must have cost many times as much as my expedition. They determined the height of Huascarán to be 23,812 feet, and the neighboring peak of Aconcagua to be 22,850 feet. This survey made me appear as a poor second to the ably assisted Mrs. Workman. "I do not question their measurements," I am satisfied now that earlier measurements on which I relied were very carelessly made. I am going to South America to climb the highest peak there, whatever it may be. If it is Aconcagua, as Mrs.

Workman's engineers seem to have proved, I shall endeavor to reach the top of that. I had intended to call my book on my last climb 'The Apex of America,' but I changed this when the new surveys were made.

"I am taking with me as my expert assistant Carl Volkman, who has spent many years in Alpine climbing. We shall find other help among the natives. I hope, also, to pick up other persons interested in exploring in South America."

"We are going in a strait from the vicinity of Lake Laurinchen, one of the five of the least known regions on earth. We expect to be able to find the principal sources of the greatest river in the world. The location of this source has been a disputed question."

"I hope to pay the expenses of the expedition by lectures about the United States at various cities along the coast of South America. The principal thing one needs for mountain climbing is a physically strong heart. The great heights are, of course, deadly for persons with weak hearts. I am healthy, but not particularly strong or muscular."

"Don't call me a woman mountain climber. I have climbed 1,500 feet higher than any man in the United States, according to the Workman measurement of Mount Huascarán. That entitles me to be called a mountain climber without qualification."

Why Fear of Death Drives Men to Suicide

A FEW weeks ago a man in New York committed suicide because he feared he was to be murdered. One would imagine that death at the hands of another would be no worse than death self-inflicted, and that, at any rate, the chances of escaping the former would be great enough under almost any conditions to deter one from seeking the latter.

But this man, Morris Glatz by name, when threatened with murder could see no other outlet but suicide. His case is a remarkable one, and shows to what lengths men may go when obsessed with fear.

Glatz was a detective in the service of a great railroad. He was a brave man and always did his duty. Why, then, should he kill himself?

or hate. It is inherited by every man, woman and child from our forefathers in the beginning of the world.

"But even a highly educated man or woman may be afraid of certain things. A man who does a great deal of walking about the city streets may be afraid of automobiles. He has read a thousand newspaper accounts of persons being run down by motor cars, and he cannot help connecting them with himself. Perhaps he has actually witnessed such an accident, and has imagined himself the victim. Of course, he knows that so long as he keeps on the sidewalk he is safe, but at every block he has to cross the open street.

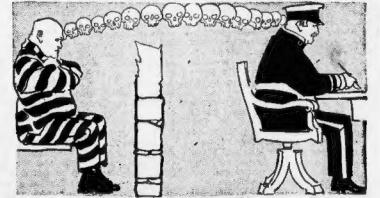

"Such a fear works on the mind, if the mind be in a condition to permit such working. It also can pro-

"Burning with the thought of revenge, the man with the number has been biding his time."

The reason given by those who know him to do with another man—a nameless man—a man with a number instead of a name. Within the grim walls of Sing Sing Prison this man without a name is serving five years at hard labor because he was a menace to the community. The records of his trial show that the chief witness against him—the man on whose testimony he was convicted—was Morris Glatz, the railroad detective.

Burning with the thought of revenge, fired by the desire for "square" with Morris for having put him behind the bars, the man with a number has been biding his time. Once a month the State permits him to write a letter to some friend in the free world outside the walls, and in each letter the prisoner sent a little message to Morris Glatz, the man who had deprived him of freedom. Tell the Twinkler I'm going to get him when I get out," was the message, repeated again and again, once a month, with unceasing regularity.

"The Twinkler" is the name by which Morris is said to have been known to the inmates of the prison. Others of his kind, Morris was a detective, well versed in the slang of crooks; he knew what the nameless man meant when he wrote that he was going to "get" him. Some day the gates of Sing Sing would open, and then—look out, Morris Glatz!

The words of the message assumed a personal form; they became a personal threat. "I'm going to get you, Twinkler!" Day after day they rang in Morris's ears, as though the nameless man were whispering to him. And at last came the day when Morris, as his friends tell it, lost his nerve and "got" himself.

"Threatened with murder, Glatz could see no other outlet but suicide."

But why "should he take his life with the sender of the message?"

The answer is given by a man who ought to know—the head of the greatest psychopathic ward in the world. This is the explanation given by Dr. M. S. Gregory, physician in charge of the psychopathic ward at Bellevue Hospital.

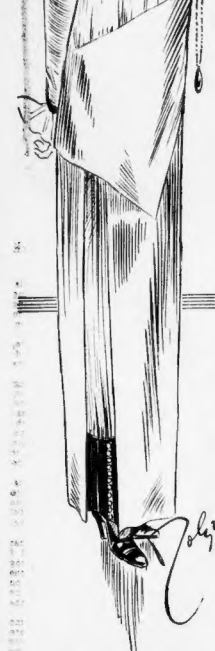

"Fear is an emotion," said Dr. Gregory, "just as powerful as love

The New Walking Gowns

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her own original models.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new establishment in Paris, puts her in even closer touch with that centre of fashion.

Her American establishment is at 17 West Twenty-sixth street, New York City.

A Chic Walking Suit of White Corded Silk with Panels of Blue Chiffon at Sides of the Skirt. The New High Collar is a Feature of This Model.

Latest Models, Showing That the High Collar, in a Modified Form, Is with Us Again.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

I AM sending you to-day sketches of two of the newest gowns for the Summer season. One of them, a very chic creation, is of a white-corded silk. The skirt has panels at the sides of blue chiffon over which gathered into deep bands of gray satin.

The coat has the new high collar and revers of gray, and has the chiffon let into the coat as on the skirt. I do not think we shall give a very heavy welcome to the high collar again, although the design shown is perhaps less objectionable than former styles, on account of the open front.

The other is a charming tunic gown. The sketch shows how the tunic and the half-corsege are drawn into a round bodice made of the material.

"The underskirt and one-half of the corsage to be of emerald green chiffon embroidered in tarnished silver spots. The girls is of dull mauve of different shades. Worn with a black and white hat with a small, dull mauve velvet bow at the side the costume is irresistible.

With many pretty new suits there is plenty of room for choice. There is, for instance, the notable new creation modelled on that "Highwayman" coat, whose picturesque has hitherto been almost exclusively monopolized by the small boy. Now, however, the full-grown woman of fashion can array herself in a grass green froise which is cut and decoratively provided with deep cape collars piped with black and fastening in front with big ornaments of dull gold cord.

The black silk, too, is continued as facing for the revers. Other telling touches of black are on buttons and loops; a further chance for contrast being afforded by the opening of the seams of the coat for some ten or twelve inches at either side, above and beneath which they are held together by some more of the big and beautiful buttons.

Next to make a dark-blue serge coat quite distinctive it is provided with an upstanding Napoleon collar of leaf green linen embroidered in black and white and three different shades of green, a bordering piping of black velvet being a protective, as well as a pretty addition. Its lining, too, is in that delicious cool-looking shade of green, and, inasmuch as it is cut with very wide armholes, a straight panel back and wrap over fronts. Its contour is as satisfactory as its coloring.

Or do you perhaps prefer the idea of a gracefully hanging affair of moonlight blue chiffon, veiled with a black chiffon, which is all embroidered with cut steel beads? The cape, like drapery, which hangs low down at the back, being so contrived that it can, when desired, be thrown about the shoulders in the form of a scarf. Many tassels, too, of the shining beads figure in a scheme which, as regards its effect, is admirable, though I must warn you that the weight of this wrap is very considerable, so that you may probably, and wisely, decide on one of the lighter varieties of these. There is one in rose-colored satin, which only about the shoulders is embroidered in silver threads and pink beads and higgles, its principal and pretty feature being an inner scarf of filmy lace which can be crossed over the neck and thereby afford the protection of which we are generally deprived nowadays—and what is more important, nights—owing to the absence of collars on the lighter varieties of these. A tassel, too, of silk and silver there is to hang so low down at the back that it will be a veritable trap to the unwary man or woman who follows too closely behind the wearer at theatre or restaurant. So that, after all, and because of the resulting anxiety as to the fate of the said tassel, this coat may be almost as heavy a weight to the wearer as the steel-embroidered model, mental weights and worries being even harder to bear than a physical burden!

device of gold thread, as fine as a cobweb, being also worked on the upstanding collar, to which a piping of black is once more an effective addition. A black satin sash is folded high up about the waist, its fringed ends looped at the left side—all of which is distinctly effective, though such a coat is, of course, only suited to wear with a rather limited number of dresses, and could not by any possibility be slipped over a tailored coat and skirt costume in the accommodating way which the average woman demands of her wraps.

However, so many different tastes and occasions have to be provided for that I present this new idea to your consideration for what it is worth—this, literally being a considerable amount in hard cash, seeing that it is the latest creation of one of our most famous fashion makers, who is furthermore responsible for the introduction of a very striking race coat of dark blue serge silk, trimmed with enormously wide reversible ribbon.

This on one side shows black and white striped satin, saved from any coldness of effect by the faintest possible flash of color caught from the inner corse satin. This contrast of color is quite beautifully contrived throughout, for the coat is lined with corse satin, but just in the front is faced with the striped silk, a final piping of corse coming into outward evidence, however, even when the coat is fastened over with its triple loops and ornaments of entwined silver rouleaux.

There is a flash of color, too, from the cuff lining and piping and from the buttons of black and corse, and last but not least, there is a gracefully draped hood effect, where the striped silk is so upturned as to bring a bordering of corse into full view, a central band of black velvet, studded with two of those dully colored buttons catching it up in the centre in the quaintest and prettiest way.

Then what do you think of a veritable "Red Riding Hood" wrap of scarlet serge lined with black sarsa—a silk which, as I probably have realized, is being

How Any Woman Can Become Strong—No. 1

Learn to Box If You'd Be Healthy, Nimble, Good Tempered—but Don't Try These Dangerous Blows at First

"Pressing the blow home, as it were, holding it as a singer holds a long note in music—each for the same reason, the effect."

MISS LURA BENNETT, who has been engaged by this newspaper to write a series of articles on "How Any Woman Can Be Strong," is pre-eminently fitted for the work. She is said by her admirers to be the greatest all-around athlete of her sex in this country.

Miss Bennett takes an eight-mile walk before breakfast every morning. She eats but two meals a day and sleeps nine hours every night. She can swim, box, fence, wrestle, ride and run.

With her sister, Miss Crystal Bennett, she has been interesting and amazing audiences at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre by her feats of strength and skill, as one of the four "Will Roehm's Athletic Girls."

How Any Woman Can Become Strong

By Lura Bennett

ANY woman can become strong who wishes to be. And to be fashionable, she must be strong. The lily maid of reed-like slowness is out of date. The full blown rose of natural crimson is the symbol of the womanhood of to-day. The woman of another generation had her motto, "Slower and be strong." The woman of to-day has quite another, "Be strong and do not suffer."

But this is a practical age and a practical country. All the women who have looked at the pictures of my sister and myself on this page, and who have read thus far, say: "We agree with you, but how shall we become strong?" I am glad to tell you. I shall begin today as I began eleven years ago, when I was a girl of twelve, with a lesson in boxing.

Boxing is an excellent exercise to correct one of the primal weaknesses of women. Do you know that women are the only beings of the female sex in the scale of creation who are slower than the male?

Lion hunters back from Africa all say that they would rather encounter a lion face to face in an impassable jungle than a lioness, for two reasons. One, because the lioness has "the meaner disposition." But chiefly because the lioness is so much quicker than the lion. It is true of the tiger and his mate. Watch a Tom cat and a Tabitha. The female is twice as quick in her movements. It is true of birds, of fowl, of fish. It is a general truth in the animal kingdom with the single exception of man and his mate, woman. Woman is slower, and I suppose this statement will cause a storm of contradictions, clamorous than man. I interpret here, in justice and seriously, that I am speaking in a physical sense. Mentally women are far stumblers than men.

Boxing is valuable for another reason, which especially applies to our sex. It teaches us to measure distance. In that respect again we are weak. That is the reason that a ball game played by women is usually a joke. The players have an infant's sense of distance, which makes the efforts at pitching and batting ludicrous. The old saying that a woman can't hit the side of a barn is exaggerated, but it is the exaggeration of a basic truth, and that truth is that women have to be trained to measure distance.

Again, beside its value in the matters of which I have spoken, boxing has its value in correcting a peculiar fault of women, their sensitiveness. I will not call it temper. A multimillionaire said he liked his son to play baseball because it taught him to take a licking like a man. Boxing teaches a woman to take a defeat in a manly fashion. When they begin boxing there are many quivering lips, flushed faces and moist eyes, but a few lessons teaches women what they all need to learn, to eliminate the personal element.

Boxing develops the arms, the shoulders, the chest, the parts of the body in which women are deficient. It has saved many a life threatened by tuberculosis, for it forces a woman to breathe deeply to provide all the air she needs for her exercise. And it has more than a developmental value, because it teaches the pupil to "drop a puncher with a punch," to protect herself in crowded streets, or to defend herself and her home against an invading burglar.

Another picture shows the blow employed by many prize-fighters, and which is taught by my instructor, Mr. Will Roehm, and other instructors as one of the best aggressive blows.

force we must employ to deal the other a blow. We are aiming for each other's chin, and the fixed look you observe is the measuring glance. The woman with the best sense of distance, the training and skill in other respects being equal, will deal the more telling blow.

The point of the chin is the target for all amateurs and professionals. A good picture shows me pressing the blow home, as it were, holding it as a singer holds a long note in music, each for the same reason, the effect.

It was John L. Sullivan, I believe, who could give the chin punch harder than any other man in the days of his championship.

The solar plexus, the gathering point of many nerves and muscles, and which has been called the body brain, is another target for the boxer. It is at the pit of the stomach. A blow struck there disables one's opponent for the time, as Robert Fitzsimmons discovered, for with it he won his championship of the world.

The kidney blow, which is illustrated on this page, is one of the surest and cruellest blows. It is one that is avoided by the more merciful experienced fighters and by all beginners.

I wish to emphasize the fact that the blows which my sister and I illustrate on this page are among the most difficult and dangerous known to boxing. They should on no account even be attempted by women who are not adepts with the gloves.

At no other sport, boxing trains the player to endurance. Blows are practically continuous, the players being in the ring all the time, two retiring to regain their power of "soaking" eventually, "stepping for a blow," they call it, while two others enter the lists. A rest of longer than five seconds while actively playing is "penalized"—that is, the player pays a penalty of a fine or failure. The hands being protected by large padded gloves, it is entirely safe to give the blows with full force.

It is wonderful and gratifying to see the look of surprise and respect that comes into the eyes of a street man when a girl who has been trained to box leads with her leg striking his jaw and laying him prostrate at her disdainful feet.

"A blow on the solar plexus disables one's opponent for a time as Robert Fitzsimmons discovered."

"The blow employed by many prize-fighters—one of the best aggressive blows."

"The kidney blow, one of the surest and cruellest blows. It is avoided by the more merciful, experienced fighters and by all beginners."

other games. It has the further value that it can be played indoors and out and in all seasons.

I wish to utter one word of caution. Women should use a shield in boxing, or should box with such care and consideration that they do not strike each other's breasts. All well informed women know that in that delicate area a blow may be dangerous, even fatal. At the beginning they may wear a shield upon their faces if they wish.

In the pictures shown on this page I illustrate how in boxing we measure distance. Each of us feeling a blow is really measuring to the fraction of an inch the distance we are apart and exactly how much "The Modern Man" is Only a Degenerated Ape!

The Skull of a Year Old Gorilla on the Left; of a Man in the Middle; of an Adult Gorilla on the Right. The Baby is Always Close to the Primitive Stock. The Shape of the Baby Gorilla's Head Proves the Original Gorilla Stock Was Similar to That of Man; the Changes Shown in the Adult Gorilla's Skull Reveal His Degeneration. A Gorilla, Therefore, Started Out to Be a Man, but Degenerated into an Ape.

By Professor H. von Buttel-Reepen, of Oldenburg, Germany.

MAN is not descended from the ape, as has been so generally misunderstood to be the teaching of evolutionary science, nor is man the descendant of apelike ancestors, as many scientists believe him to be.

The latest discoveries in evolutionary science have given rise to a far more acceptable theory, advanced by the distinguished Professor Klatzsch, of Berlin, and others. It is that man is the ascending degenerate and the ape the descending and degenerate offspring of the same prehistoric stock.

The progenitor of man was not an ape nor even like an ape. He was more like the man of today. And here we have an explanation of the astonishing modernness of the skull so recently found at Gally Hill on the Thames in England. The Gally Hill man must be at the most conservative estimate a quarter of a million years old. And yet, if his skull is to be taken as an index of his appearance, he could have walked through a crowd of every-day Englishmen and never have been remarked upon as peculiar.

The new evolution can be simply explained by the reconstruction of the line of the origin of the different types of mankind, as well as of the different apes—which are, in fact, our degenerate cousins.

The great original ancestor of man appeared on a long lost continent of which the strange island of Java is probably one of the remnants, and the memory of which may still come down to us in the form of the Garden of Eden legend.

This continent, of which there still remain ample evidence and included the lower part of what is now called Asia, the archipelago of which the Dutch East Indies and New Guinea are the large parts and extended over what is now Australia and Tasmania. It was then strongly tropical. Indeed it is possible that this lost land mass extended very close to what is now the South Pole and that the Pole itself may have had an eternal Summer! Later came an enormous convulsion of nature and this whole continent was torn apart and sunk beneath the waves, leaving Java, New Guinea, Australia, and the scattered islands of the South Pacific. This has been called sometimes the lost continent of Lemuria. That this whole continent had a distinct and separate life is shown by the survival of the various animal and plant forms, like those of no other part of the world, which still exist there. I refer to the kangaroo, the bilby, the platypus, that strange four-footed animal which lays eggs, the Tasmanian wolf and a host of others.

On this lost continent appeared man's referred line toward Africa, after other streams had gone into what is now Australia and Tasmania. These latter two streams are today the degenerate Bushmen and the Tasmanians. Thousands of years ago both Bushmen and Tasmanians had a far higher culture than now. This is shown by the really artistic remains in their countries. Through natural causes degeneration set in and the Australian aboriginal today is little better than an ape. Given time enough he would probably become an ape, and in that case we could see ourselves his relentless downward evolution that our cousins, the chimpanzees, have experienced.

Very early the stream flowed to Africa, for that continent then was perhaps formed much as it now is. Very early, too, there was a divergent branch which became the dwarf negro, the Mironogrid. These we still have in the pygmies of the Congo. In Africa part of this stream degenerated into the true gorilla and part of it rose into the highly specialized negro race and Homo primigenus, or earliest man.

In the meantime another great stream of "Foremen" had flowed into Europe, reaching there together with the animals, before the Great Ice Age. This stream, while it was developing, was also throwing off the degenerate offspring which were to become the chimpanzees as we know them today.

This process of evolution and degeneration can be made plain by a modern example. Suppose that one family has seven sons and seven daughters, and that five of the former and five of the latter are of higher type than the original parents. It is a law of evolution that a degenerate offspring shall produce continually degenerating types, while a higher offspring will have continually rising descendants up to a certain point when exhaustion occurs.

Suppose that two sons and two daughters are below the parents, in fact degenerate. Suppose that the normal or higher sons and daughters mate with as high types as themselves. Their offspring will probably be as high as or higher than they are. Suppose the degenerates mate with other degenerates. Their offspring will be as low as or lower than themselves. Continue this for ages. From the same parents then we will have a stock of ascending offspring or a stock of degenerate descendants. So it is with man and

The Comparison Proves That the Chimpanzee Ape's Jaw Was Further Advanced Than Now, While the White's European Man, Was Lower Than Now.

Gorilla races. Then parting entirely from the Gorillids, they migrated and established themselves in Europe, mixing with that other European stream I have mentioned, which was accompanied by the ancestors of the chimpanzees. "Prochom." It would seem, separated themselves more completely Stranger still, they assert that the three great races of man—the Caucasian, the Aethiopian and the Negro—have their individual types of degenerate monkey cousins. The same stock that worked up into the white, the yellow and the black races of today threw off from time to time degenerative children, who in their turn formed the degraded and downward-going creatures that appear to-day as chimpanzees, gorillas and orang-utans.

In the diagram on this page the man-like creature at the heart of the tree is the Propliopithecus, which the Klatzsch school says was the progenitor of man and degenerate man—the ape. He originated on a great sunken continent, of which Java is the remnant. He has been shown more man-like than Propliopithecus, which is shown as a shoot from the main trunk. The lower races of Bushmen and Tasmanians extend from the bottom of the tree. The three branches are shown throwing off of the same time, through ages, the animals which were to develop into modern man and degenerate into apes.

The Aurignac skull is the earliest remains found of the developing Aethiopian. The Aurignac man and his degenerate cousins, the ancestors of the orang-utans, lived side by side in their caves.

The earliest European man, the Neanderthal, is a cousin of the chimpanzee. Gaby Deslys, at the top of the tree, the little chamber of ex-King Manuel, is, therefore, related to the chimpanzee. He is not related to the orang-utan, nor to the gorilla.

The young gorilla closely resembles a man, but the older he grows the more marked becomes the divergence.

The interesting problem now is to discover some remains of the original propliopithecus or "Foreman," and this is just what we are hopefully anticipating. Professor Max Schlosser has just found the remains of a remarkable fossil mammal in Egypt, which gives promise of clearing up this problem.

He calls the animal "Propliopithecus," meaning "before the modern ape." It has an almost human jaw, the canine teeth being only moderately developed and the incisors nearly perpendicular as in man. Schlosser claims that this is not an ancestor of the apes but of a form leading directly up to man.

The meeting in Europe of the type mainly chimpanzoid and the orangutoid type from Asia is another of the interesting points which the students of the new evolution are endeavoring to clear up. It has been already suggested that the Neanderthal type of chimpanzoid origin and the Aurignac man of orangutoid origin have not actually met.

Further, there is evidence to show that the result of this fusion was the Cro-Magnon man, a very well defined type of primitive humanity of which examples have been found in France and Germany.

The remains show that the Cro-Magnon type of man became predominant in the Ice Age. These men were particularly prominent as reindeer hunters. It appears from inscriptions that late in the paleolithic or old stone age, the Cro-Magnon man supplanted the Neanderthal man and became the dominant type for ages. It is this type to which the modern European is descended.

note ancestor, the being whom Klatzsch calls "propliopithecus," that was the immediate ancestor of man and the ape. What its immediate ancestor was we do not know.

Up until now the scientific world has accepted the pithecanthropus erectus, the apelike man whose remains, found some years ago on the island of Java, were supposed to furnish the "missing link" as the original ancestor of man. He is the "buckler" of the kind. Pithecanthropus was an abortive shoot from "ape" or "before-pithecanthropus." He was a trunk. He did not survive and did not develop into man. He lived awhile and died—just as a "buckler" emerges from the trunk of a tree, to wither at last away without getting anywhere.

Propliopithecus was very much more like man than like the man-ape, both in bodily proportion and shape of jaw and head. I will hereafter call him "Foreman." His feet, unlike the ape's, were never gripping organs. The gripping faculty of the feet is not a primitive trait; it is a mark of degeneration. We have no remains of these Foremen, but we can tell that while they were not like apes.

As racial degeneration goes on, the degenerate type grows less and less like the normal ancestor. The closer it is to the original stock the more it resembles it. This does not apply with the same force to the ascending stock.

monkeys—both the descendants of the Propliopithecus or "Foreman."

Now one of the oldest skulls in the world is that which is known as the Neanderthal man, because it was found at Neanderthal in Germany. He is the lowest type of true man yet found. He is a degenerate of the Gorillid, only until they developed a higher type in brain structure, which separated them from the degenerating Gorilla and the arrested development of the

from the original Javan "Foremen" than either the African or the Asiatic branches. Under stress of natural obstacles they grew faster than the others into the man type of today. And so their degenerate cousins, the chimpanzee-like forms, remained truer to the normal stock than either the gorilla or the orang-utan. In fact we may guess that the "Foremen," when any of their remains are discovered, will more closely resemble the chimpanzees than any other apelike form. The other anthropoid apes have diverged much more from the original human type.

There was another great stream of "Foremen," who under the pressure of the search for food travelled eastward into Asia. They developed highly specialized forms which may be seen today in the orang-utan apes, which are degenerate offshoots of the original type, and in the orangoid types of man in Asia today.

This type of "Foreman" spread all over Asia and eventually extended into Europe, where the chimpanzoid and gorillid types had already established themselves. The orangoid type of man is represented in Europe today by the Aurignac man, the name given to an important type of prehistoric man originally found at Aurignac in Central France. Several skulls of the same type have been found. The forehead is higher than in other primitive men, just as the forehead of the orang is higher than the chimpanzees, but the brain capacity is less.

The orangoid or Aurignac man reached Europe at the time of the Ice Age, together with many Asiatic animals, including the mammoth, rhinoceros and others, and these lived to some extent with the Neanderthal or chimpanzoid man.

The Pithecanthropus erectus of Java, it may here be noted, is only a little way on the tree of evolution. It degenerated into the gibbon type of ape there ended.

Apes, we must see from what has been said, are really abortive efforts at humanity. They are not descendants of the Neanderthal or Aurignac man, but of a common ancestor who have been forced by less favorable conditions to sacrifice some of their human characteristics in the struggle for existence.

As man and the anthropoid apes are descendants of the same ancestor we should add that the young ape presents a stronger resemblance to man than the mature ape. It is a well-established biological law that the degenerate descendant is closer in youth to the original normal type than in old age. This is exactly what we find in the apes. They show their specialities of degeneration as they mature. Take the pictures of a young gorilla, a man and an adult gorilla. The young gorilla closely resembles a man, but the older he grows the more marked becomes the divergence.

The interesting problem now is to discover some remains of the original propliopithecus or "Foreman," and this is just what we are hopefully anticipating. Professor Max Schlosser has just found the remains of a remarkable fossil mammal in Egypt, which gives promise of clearing up this problem.

of Berlin, Thinks Caused Disastrous Electrical Storms in New York

PROFESSOR HENSINGMULLER, of Berlin, who some weeks ago startled the scientific world with the announcement that the ultimate effect of wireless electricity would be to render us all toothless, bald and even insane unless proper precautions were taken, has made another bid for scientific notice.

He declares that the violent electrical storms which caused so much havoc in New York and vicinity a few weeks ago were caused by the earthquake in Mexico.

The unusual intensity of the waves produced by this cataclysm have already been remarked by other scientists, although none of them has mentioned the connection between the earthquake and the electrical storms nearly twenty-five hundred miles

Thus Professor Garrett P. Serviss pointed out that the shock imparted to the earth was felt at places thousands of miles from the point of origin and beyond the Atlantic Ocean. It was felt and recorded by the seismographs at Tortosa, in Spain; at Brussels, in Belgium; at Breslau, in the centre of the continent of Europe, and even at far-away Tiflis in the Caucasus.

According to Professor Hensingrulier, however, while the force of the shock was perceptible in these far-off places, its intensity was expended on this continent, the focal point being in the vicinity of New York. In a convulsion of the magnitude of this Mexican phenomenon, he points out, a tremendous amount of electricity is generated which has its effect upon the atmosphere and the clouds in the region where its force is principally felt.

Observers declared that fire and smoke were seen to come out of the fissures which were rent in the ground. These, Professor Jenningsmuller explains, were not really fire and smoke at all, but were produced by electrical discharges which lit up the clouds of dust thrown up out of the fissures.

Perhaps the most remarkable proposition advanced by the professor in this regard, however, is the statement that in addition to the earth waves, the atmospheric waves and the sound waves, which earthquakes are known to produce, these disturbances likewise disperse powerful electrical waves through the earth and air.

These electrical waves, unlike those emanating from the sun, do not radiate, but are dispersed around the world decagonally, that is to say, along the lines of a ten-sided figure cutting off ten equal segments of the earth's circumference.

Sometimes the violence of these waves is not equally at each of the angles of this polygon, but more frequently the force is increased at the first angle reached.

In the case of the Mexican earthquake, any point on the earth's surface 2,500 miles away from the point of disturbance, a distance corresponding to the first side of the cone, was likely to feel the severity of the electrical discharge. New York is just that distance from Mexico City, where the earthquake occurred, and just happened to be the first focal point of the electric waves according to Professor Hensigsmuller, therefore lies the explanation of New York's present state.

This theory is most remarkable in view of the fact that if the electric waves thus produced by earthquakes do indeed travel in this peculiar manner, they are the only waves, electrical or otherwise, thus far known to do so.

The science of seismology is in its infancy, however, and Professor Hensungku's theory is perhaps as plausible as many others that have been advanced by seismologists. The ambition of the seismologist is to attain sufficient knowledge to enable him to predict earthquakes long enough in advance to afford efficient warning to those living within the threatened zone, and, according to Professor Servin, there are indications that he may succeed.

The greatest ground of hope," Professor Service declares, "is found in the fact that in the nature of all science, contrary to that of some other forms of human action, progress continually. We have within a few years seen the entire field of physical science ploughed up by unexpected discoveries, and yet the science goes on plowing new and more productive crops. Every discovery leads to other discoveries, and there is no standing still."

"GERTIE MILLAR SIGHS FOR SOMETHING NEW"

—Says Alan Dale.

By Alan Dale.

THE George Edwardes (but I do not necessarily a beautiful, pleasant, mollified. Don't believe it for a solitary moment. Perhaps the most memorable and pictorially interesting of the Gaiety street have been the plucky lovely dancers who have "married into the peerage" but—there are others. It is possible, though not at all usual, to be a George Edwardes girl with a "temperament." By that I mean that it is possible for a girl to own all the Gaiety requirements and yet be able to throw plates and break glasses in moments of festive indignation. I always thought that Miss Gertie Millar had a certain "temperament" of her own. Elinor, willow, with flashing eyes, and very red lips (I didn't say very "reddened" lips), Miss Millar appeared to me as a person. My rather than a beauty, in New York she had very little chance. She was one of the "Girls of Gaiety" and they were not at all skittish in London, of course she can do what she likes and I fancy that she does it. It was after witnessing a very curious incident at the Adelphi Theatre, where I went to see Miss Millar in "The Quaker Girl," that I asked her to "chat" with me. This was the incident: It was the night of the Derby and London was conventionally demoralized. Mr. Joseph Coyne, who plays "read" in "The Quaker Girl," did not appear at all in the cast. His place was taken by an understudy. Miss Millar came on in due course, and sang her opening song, prettily enough. As far as I could make out from the front, Coyne's understudy seemed to be her niece. At any rate, after having sung her first song, she never appeared again that night. An understudy finished the performance for her. Nothing was explained. I could imagine her "throwing things." I pleaded with her to believe that here at that was a London favorite with "nerves," and so overrode me, it sounds like a platitude—a mere substitute for "We're having fine weather," or "We're not having fine weather."

Miss Gertie Millar, the Famous Star of the Gaiety Theatre, London.

I became a tolerably successful actor. I used to read you every day when I was in New York," she said, "and I know all about you, and you can consider yourself introduced." Of course, that was very accurate. I had been ten years younger I should have been flattered. Most scolding feelings like to be told by pretty girls that they have been "read." I fancy I used to like it myself, once upon a time. Now, alas! it cuts no ice. When an actress tells me that she "reads" me, it sounds like a platitude—a mere substitute for "We're having fine weather," or "We're not having fine weather."

"You recall New York to me," she continued, piling on the agony, "and you have said a plaintive sigh. 'And I loved it.' Oh, I had a lovely time in New York, and I want to go back."

"You are so much on the alert," she continued, piling on the agony, "and you have said a plaintive sigh. 'And I loved it.' Oh, I had a lovely time in New York, and I want to go back."

"I used to read you every day," Mr. Dale.

"Give my love to my friends," Miss Gertie.

This sounded awfully good. Miss Millar's eyes flashed. I wondered what she was "telling" me. For a star to complain that there was nobody to vie with her seemed ominous. I was puzzled. "Just I should," she said most energetically. "Indeed, I should. Why, the other night, when that little girl played my part, I was really delighted. I had given her a chance and I fancy that she made good." Miss Millar looked at me steadily. My face, I believe, was immobile. I've never yet met a stage lady who liked a successful understudy. In fact, I've known many stage ladies who have recovered from the acutest forms of nervous prostration, as soon as they heard of their understudy's pleasing success. Of course, I didn't say this.

"You were very angry that night when you didn't go on," I suggested. Miss Millar looked pained—not angry, butrieved. "Not at all," she said. "I was feeling very ill indeed. I simply couldn't sing the situation. I felt like collapsing, so I withdrew. It was annoying, but I couldn't help it." I was hoping for something more sensational. I should have known better. Yet I could still see "temperament" in the dark pool of her eyes. I liked her. I liked her very much better than the soft pretty, flimsy little ladies, who cling and look brittle.

"You mustn't imagine," said Miss Millar, "that because my husband, London Monckton, writes all the music for me that I can't sing anybody else's. That is the whole wrong idea. I appeared in 'The Waltz Dream,' and honestly enjoyed it immensely. It was quite a relief singing somebody else's music. And what lovely music! 'But Mr. Monckton's music is delicious.' I suggested.

"Curse be the man who comes between my daughter, Marie, and the fortune which was earned for her by the sweat of my brow!" Jean Janac buried his treasure and told no one, not even his executor, of its hiding place. Now the trader's widow, a Sioux woman, and the comely daughter, Marie, have left the Indian agency at Santee to seek their days among the lakes and groves of Minnesota. they have deliberately abandoned, and Harm & Tuleys, the present owners of the squaw man's old trading store, have been granting permits to treasure hunters who have taken up the task on a 50 per cent basis. The first man to accept these terms and break the squaw man's curse was James Blackton, a tenderfoot from Sioux City. When he arrived, he was quickly informed of the dangers he ran for not only the curse which the squaw man had put upon the hidden gold. "I fear not," he answered boldly. "I need the money, and am willing to dare the squaw man's curse if I can only get enough to make my vacation expenses. Others, encouraged by the bravado of the tenderfoot, declared themselves willing to follow his example, and the treasure began to surface. Apart from the $15,700 which was found soon after the squaw man's death, however, the treasure seekers have had only their trouble for their pains.

"What Is There Left for Me?" the Star of All George Edwardes' Gaiety Girls Asks Plaintively

As I said, there is nobody new. Nothing happens. I don't know what will become of me later on. It is quite serious. I looked at her and liked her some more. She wasn't a bit satisfied, and yet she has every reason to be. With the most musical husband in London and the most discerning manager in the world, Miss Gertie Millar's lot in life would seem enviable. Still, musical comedy must grate it, in good sooth, gritty. I like to want to hurt in and suggest to Miss Millar that with her temperament (that's about the strength time I've seen her seething word) she might aim higher. What's the use of sowing the seeds of discontent? Moreover, Miss Millar, who is anything but a fool, has probably thought the matter out for herself, very carefully, and perhaps much more logically than I can think it out. But she is the first established musical comedy girl who has ever repined, or seemed to repine, at her eminently successful career. So I think she is distinctly worth emphasizing, don't you?

"But I must do America again," she continued. "I didn't have enough of it. I only played New York. I was anxious to go to Philadelphia, but Mr. Frohman wouldn't let me. I've heard a lot about your one-night stands." "Philadelphia is not a one-night stand," said I, though I hold no brief for Philadelphia.

"Now," she ventured, gently interrogative. "Oh, I know that, of course. But I wanted to travel in America and see the country, for New York inspired me. I don't find much difference between New York and London audiences. It seems to me that they are very much the same. When they like anybody in New York they are just as enthusiastic as they are in London. But I wouldn't like to appear in New York in 'The Quaker Girl.' I don't think it is my part, but part of my program is to be done in New York, but not with me. When I return I want something better for the American market. I have heard of friends in America who will give me love to them."

"Want that cut?" Of course, I promised I would, and I will. All friends of Miss Gertie Millar, in U. S. A., please accept her love. I don't bring it back with me because I might have to pay duty on it now, being sort of professional. I have heard of friends in America who will give me love to them."

"You won't be down before you go to America," I asked enthusiastically. "No," she said. "I'm just tired, that's all, and I feel I'd like to settle down. I don't say that I shall, but that I'd like to. Which seems like a distinction without a difference, for what's the difference between you, me and the besotted, I don't think for a moment that Miss Gertie Millar wants to retire. Therefore, she won't!"

"I Will Dare to Try for the Squaw Man's Treasure."

Devil's Nest, Neb., July 4. Unfortunately for Marie, the fortune, which was estimated at the time at considerably over $50,000, was protected not only by the soldier's curse, but by an even more potent precautionary measure. "MY CANAL BOAT THEATRE"

Before and After the Show the Artists Become Simple Canal-Boat Men and Women, and Perform Real Work.

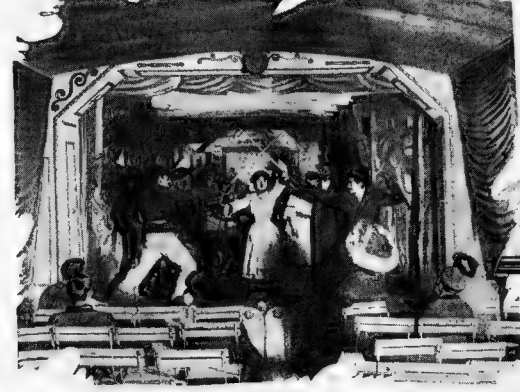

How a Charming French Actress Keeps the Wolf from the Door and Runs a Troupe That Really Does Work

WHAT is, perhaps, the most remarkable theatrical establishment in the world is the marine theatre conducted by Mme. Perney, in France. It is on a canal boat, and is towed from town to town wherever the waterways allow.

Mme. Perney is the widow of Jacques Perney, the owner of a large traveling theatrical show. Upon his death his wife wished to continue the business on the same lines, but being unable to do so on account of the heavy expenses of railroad travel, conceived the canal boat idea. How she fares she tells in the following article:

Mme. Jacques Perney, the Originator and Promoter of the Canal-Boat Theatre.

By Mme. Jacques Perney.
The advantages of the plan from the standpoint of economy are many. In the first place, I don't have to pay rent or bother with canal boat because I could not see my way clear to rent expensive theatres and pay large transportation bills, as he had done. The experiment has proved such a wonderful success, peculiarly and otherwise, that I wouldn't think of turning it into a land show again, although I now have sufficient capital to do so.

With the little money that my husband left I bought two canal boats, one 150 feet long and 35 feet wide, and the other somewhat smaller. The larger boat I used for the theatre. The stage was the full width of the boat, and I had accommodations for an audience of 300. On this boat, too, there is a spacious dressing room.

The smaller boat I fitted up as living quarters for the company, which numbered twenty, fourteen men and six women, all of whom saw in the novel scheme an opportunity to combine pleasure and work.

All of the company participated in the necessary work to be done on board, the men looking after the repairs, cleaning, painting and navigating, while the women took care of the cooking, sewing and "housework." All the costumes are made by the women members of the company.

There is only one performance daily except on Saturdays, when there is a matinee and evening performance, too. Rehearsals take place in the morning or afternoon, and the regular performance is given in the evening.

advance bookings. In the second place, I have no railway fares to pay for either company or properties. And, thirdly, my company is willing to work for smaller salaries because I furnish them with board and residence.

Then, again, when I strike a town which is not responsive, it is a simple matter to "move the boat" while, on the other hand, if a play takes, I can prolong the stay as long as I desire.

We have no fear of being stranded, except literally, and that is much less of a calamity than being stranded figuratively. One night stands and travel by night, the hubbub of ordinary theatrical life, have no terrors for us. We are always on the road, and yet always home. It is a wonderful arrangement.

When we come to a town or city where our advance agent has announced a performance we make fast, throw out a gang-plank, fifteen feet wide and erect the ticket booth.

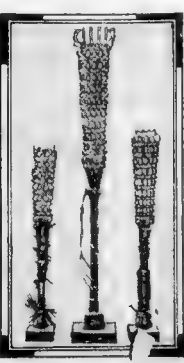

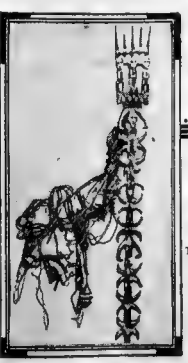

The plan undoubtedly presents advantages which should appeal to theater managers in America, where, I understand, the traveling stock company has a hard course to row. Absentee independence of booking agencies is the theatrical man's dream the world over. The canal boat theatre makes it feasible.

Mercilessly On Goes Fashion's Massacre of the Birds

ALL the efforts of the late Queen Victoria to save the birds from the plumage seem to have come to naught in London, where the slaughter of the birds for fashion's sake has become a regular trade.

YOUNG TURKS HAVE MONTENEGRO

Intervention by Powers Is Now Urged to Create a Christian State.

LONDON, July 8.—Ermion is again on the verge of a volcano. The Young Turks, under the leadership of Enver Pasha, are advancing on the Balkans to the last ditch. The campaign of devastation and massacre now started is bound to result in some which made the great war of 1917 a trifle in the civilized world. It is fairly urged that intervention looking toward the establishment of a Christian State is needed.

Russia, though friendly to Montenegro, has been far unable to interfere. Not only are the Albanians in danger, but hundreds of English and American missionaries face death unless the Powers intervene.

All the roads leading to Montenegro are crowded with Serbian refugees, and it is feared that the Turkish forces will reach the coast before the Powers can intervene.

In the narrow mountainous country of Montenegro, the crowds of starving women and children are making appeal to the civilized world for help. The Serbian refugees are now in the hands of the Turkish forces, and it is feared that they will be killed or sold into slavery.

DOMESTIC TRAGEDY ENDS

Asks an Absolute Divorce From Russell Griswold Colt of Bristol, R. I.

THE life romance of Ethel Barrymore, one of the most brilliant actresses and one of the most charming young women in the world, has been shattered. Her dream of love and a happy home with a husband to share her joys and add to her sorrows ends in the divorce.

This news comes as a distinct shock to Boston, which has seen no closer identified with the free life in the city. She made her first appearance in the city in the fall of 1904, and since that time she has been a great host of friends here who are proud to call her a resident.

It was a year ago on March 15 that the actress was married to Russell Colt, a young man of 25, who is the son of a prominent family in Bristol, R. I. The marriage was a surprise to many of the friends of the actress, who had been known for some time as a single woman.

An Ideal Quickly Crumbled.

Almost as brief as an act from one of the romances in which she has appeared on the stage, has been the life romance of Miss Barrymore. For the facts go to show that the domestic drama was a tragedy from the first.

The fact that Miss Barrymore had taken a husband was a surprise to many of her friends, who had known her as a single woman. The marriage was a surprise to many of her friends, who had known her as a single woman.

SABONY, N.Y.

At the left of the top is Miss Barrymore as she was seen in Boston in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire." At the right the actress is seen in her debut as a matron—a photograph sweetly expressive of her happiness just after she became the mother of Russell Griswold Colt. In the center is a photograph of Mr. and Mrs. Colt taken a day after their marriage at the Fairchild home in Hyde Park and sent personally to a friend on the staff of the Sunday American. To the right of the double portrait is Miss Barrymore as she appeared at the Mollie Street Theatre in Boston in "The Girl in the Red Velvet Gown." At the bottom the charming star is seen in her "The Girl in the Red Velvet Gown." The small picture inset at the right is Miss Barrymore in one of her earlier successes, "Cousin Kate."

That delightfully heart-breaking time of hers and suggested: "Better say my 'Mr. Colt'."

And sure enough, there was Mr. Colt. It was on the job behind the scenes, under the wings of the stage, that the actress met the young man who was to become her husband. The marriage was a surprise to many of the friends of the actress, who had been known for some time as a single woman.

Courted For a Dozen Years.

And that seemed rather, didn't it? Although for more than a dozen years Ethel Barrymore had been courted and had been courted by many men, she had never been married. The marriage was a surprise to many of the friends of the actress, who had been known for some time as a single woman.

Almost as brief as an act from one of the romances in which she has appeared on the stage, has been the life romance of Miss Barrymore. For the facts go to show that the domestic drama was a tragedy from the first.

The fact that Miss Barrymore had taken a husband was a surprise to many of her friends, who had known her as a single woman. The marriage was a surprise to many of her friends, who had known her as a single woman.

It is known that Miss Barrymore was married to Russell Colt, a young man of 25, who is the son of a prominent family in Bristol, R. I. The marriage was a surprise to many of the friends of the actress, who had been known for some time as a single woman.

COLT'S GAY CAREER
LONG KNOWN BY HIS FRIENDS IN BRISTOL

PROVIDING, it is true, a source of amusement to his friends in Bristol, R. I., the actress's husband, Russell Colt, was long known for his gay career. He was a young man of 25, who is the son of a prominent family in Bristol, R. I. And that seemed rather, didn't it? Although for more than a dozen years Ethel Barrymore had been courted and had been courted by many men, she had never been married. The marriage was a surprise to many of the friends of the actress, who had been known for some time as a single woman.

THE DOCTOR'S FAITH IN RIDGE'S FOOD.

You know how very recommending any article that affects health.

Bear that in mind in reading this letter from a Philadelphia physician:

"Gentlemen:

I can highly endorse Ridge's Food, and have used it in many nervous cases where all other food was unable to be digested. Twenty-eight years ago, my own child was in a delicate condition, and not expected to survive (an infant 2 or 3 weeks old). His mother fed him with the Food with a medicine dropper until he could take from bottle. He is now a robust fellow and a successful dentist.

I name this for your encouragement. For infants, it is the food par excellence."

Very truly yours,

(Name given on request.)

There is hardly a village in this Country or England that does not offer similar cases in which Ridge's Food proved the only form of nourishment on which baby would thrive. For sixty years the heartfelt gratitude of mothers has been going to this friend-in-need to their little ones.

Ridge's Food is probably the one thing needed to make your baby robust, healthy and happy.

Here is our offer: The only satisfactory proof that Ridge's Food is the best nourishment for babies is to try it. Therefore, we will send free a full-sized package to any mother.

This proves our faith in Ridge's Food which rests on sixty years' faith on the part of doctors and mothers.

Ridge's Food has proved itself of the highest value in preventing baby's hot weather troubles.

The Education of Mr. Jackson

By William F. Kirk

(Copyright, 1911, National News Association.)

(The management of the Cleveland baseball club has written the author of their own twisted word, for Jackson, offering to send him through college.)

"NOW, boys," said the gentle professor, "let's talk of early formations, the clay and the chalk. That all geological experts assert. Prop up this great globe with its strata of dirt. Now, why, in the Paleozoic time, was everything pressed into sandstone and lime? Why are traces still left, after millions of years? Perhaps Mr. Jackson can give us some reasons."

"COME, boys," said the Latin professor, "let's all read this chapter of Custer's, devoted to Gaul. These great Commentaries are simply enough. As you find later on, reading Cicer's stuff. However, before we plunge into the text, in order that none is unduly perplexed. Who was Caesar, and why were his enemies jealous? Perhaps our young friend Mr. Jackson can tell us."

"The professor of Edgely, with eyebrows ailt, ripped Custer's to pieces and tore up Dean Swift. 'What we strive for, my boys is the pure and the sweet. No poems by Milton that reek of the street. 'Tis sad to see intellect warped and debased; Such works as 'Tom Jones' should be promptly effaced. Don't you think, Mr. Jackson, that I'd better be off. For the grown-up as well as the innocent lad. 'Fiddling with lots of games,' said Joe Jackson."

Delighted With Knight Motor

Stearns Agents From All Over the Country Attend Convention and Examine New Power Plant.

On July 1st, 1911, and the convention of all Stearns dealers and branch managers was held at the factory at Cleveland, and practically every city of the country was represented. The convention was attended by men from practically every State, and an immense amount of enthusiasm was displayed in connection with the announcement of the new Stearns model, embodying the latest Knight type of motor.

A large number of orders were brought to the meeting by dealers from individual motorists who wish to be the first to own this wonderful new engine in their locality.

Addresses and talks were given by P. J. Stearns, Jr., president of the Stearns Motor Car Company, and by J. C. Kerrison, secretary of the Stearns Motor Car Company, and by J. C. Kerrison, secretary of the Stearns Motor Car Company.

Ideal tires are tires you don't have to think about all the time. Do their work unobtrusively.

Think about your tires just enough to keep them clean and fully inflated, then forget them. That's all, if they're Goodrich tires.

THE BIRTH OF THE GASOLINE MOTOR

It Is Eighteen Years Ago Since the First American Motor Car Was Seen on the Roads.

Eighteen years ago, on July 4, about 9.30 o'clock in the morning, in the city of Kokomo, Indiana, when the residents of that city were peacefully enjoying the Fourth of July, a strange looking vehicle, a motor car, was seen on the main street, and in order not to frighten animals and probably some of the more superstitious of people, a horse was hitched to this vehicle and it was pushed out into the country, several men accompanying.

When several miles out of the city the strange procession halted, the horse was unhitched and one of the party mounted the machine, started a crank and, with a series of staccato explosions, the motor car moved forward. The man at the wheel, the queer looking figure, pushed the road, propelled by its own power.

We now talk of 60, 80 and 100-horsepower cars in a very ordinary way, but the first car built in America was only a four-cylinder type, with a displacement of 100 cubic inches, and it was pushed out into the country, several men accompanying.

Stevens-Duryea Motor Cars 1911

Stevens-Duryea Motor Cars for the season of 1912 are not experimental first year designs. The Model AA, 43.8 H. P. six-cylinder car, originally brought out three years ago, has proved its success. It is now offered with refinements and improvements and with added equipment that will still further enhance its comfort, efficiency and ease of operation.

THE SEVENTH YEAR OF SIXES.

In 1905 the Stevens-Duryea Company made and advocated six-cylinder cars. Up to yesterday—certain "wise ones" called sixes "fads." But consider how many are now making or introducing Sixes.

Our leadership is acknowledged in other respects; the three cardinal Stevens-Duryea principles employed by us since 1904—the "Multiple Disc Dry" Plate Clutch, "Unit Power Plant" and "Three Point Support"—are being widely adopted. These original ideas would not be used by others unless they were unquestioned successes. Detailed information on the SEVENTH YEAR OF SIXES on request.

Model AA 43.8 H. P. $3750—Equipped. Model Y 54.1 H. P. $4000—Equipped. Model Z 56.1 H. P. $4250—Equipped.

"Miss White Rose,"—The New Gibson Flower

"GEORGINA had herself covertly put among the flowers a bunch of white roses—and here it was, singled out for the highest honors from among all his flowers. In the beginning of his illness they had come to him from the city, and from the big houses in that part of the country. But his friends had rapidly relaxed their assiduity, until, by the end of the third week, aside from an occasional bunch of flowers, there came only one regular token from the outside. It was always from the same New York florist; it was always two dozen magnificent full-blown red roses.

"Georgina knew this. And when she saw where the white roses were, she looked around for the red roses—for her one serious rival—and she found them in a tall jar in a corner of the room, behind him. And straightway there was a wild tumult in her heart.—"From 'White Roses and Red,' in the July issue of the Good Housekeeping Magazine. Copyrighted by the American Home Magazine Company.

Grin's Modern Fairy Tales—"Snow White"

ONCE upon a time there dwelt in a small city two girls who were the dearest of friends. Their names were Madeline and Muriel, and they lived in adjoining houses.

Now, Muriel was called "Snow White," because of her wonderful complexion, while Madeline was called "Blood Red," because she was healthy, light-skinned and decidedly florid. It used to nearly break Madeline's heart to see Muriel come forth on a hot day looking as cool and white as a marble Venus, while her own golden locks were tossed about and her face the tint of a Venetian sunset.

There was in the neighborhood a charming young man whose only fault seemed to be indecision, inasmuch as he was unable to determine whether it was Madeline or Muriel he preferred.

Now, both Madeline and Muriel used to declare to each other that they wouldn't marry this young man, whose name was Harold (but he couldn't help that), in a million years; that he was all right for company, but when it came to choosing him for a husband—"Oh, dear me; no, indeed!"

But it was Muriel's complexion that did it—almost. At a picnic one bright day Madeline went about happy but flushed, her face was like the celebrated "red, red rose" all over, while Muriel sauntered gracefully about, keeping in the shade or carrying a pink-tinted parasol which cast just the faintest blush-rose flush on her otherwise almost snow-white complexion.

Harold was talking with a party which included the celebrated Mrs. Catt. Every community has a Mrs. Catt. This one was like the others, and she took something to remark, "My goodness gracious, if Madeline doesn't look just like a broiled lobster, then I never! No wonder they call her 'blood red.' Now, look at Muriel; isn't she a dream? She's going to be a great beauty."

After Mrs. Catt had hammered this sort of stuff into Harold's ears for a while it set him thinking. Of course, this was quite an exertion on his part, but he decided he would grab Muriel right off before any one else stepped in and cooped the prize beauty.

And so, under the foolish moon that night, Harold timidly and fearfully asked Muriel to cook his meals, darn his socks, wait on him by inches and be generally dependent upon him for everything for all time. Of course he didn't propose in exactly those words. He asked her to allow him to be her slave for life, to allow him to attend to her every desire and want, assuring her she would never soil those dainty hands with the least sort of toil.

And Muriel, the girl with the wonderful snow-white complexion, who had solemnly sworn to her bespoken friend Madeline that she wouldn't marry Harold in a million years, hesitated almost two seconds before she said:

"This is so sudden—yes, dearest!"

Of course, Muriel rushed over to see Madeline the next morning and displayed the ring.

For almost a moment Madeline lost her florid complexion, but, with feminine tact, she kissed Muriel, told her how glad she was, how she knew they were just suited for each other, and then went to her room and wept bitterly.

That night as Madeline let down her yellow hair, which happened to all have been secured to her scalp by nature, she looked in the glass, studied her healthy but red face, and exclaimed bitterly:

"Oh, dear me! what in ever have I done that the fairies should be so unkind?"

Then a bright-eyed, sharp-nosed little fairy came to her, perched on the brass footrail of the bed and exclaimed:

"Madeline, Madeline, I will help you! Do as I bid."

"I will, ah, I will!" exclaimed Madeline. "I will do whatever you tell me," and she did not seem at all surprised to see the fairy. Then followed a list of advice from the fairy which Madeline heard with strict attention.

"And I never suspected it!" exclaimed Madeline, and straightway she began to lay some plans.

First, she reassured Muriel of her joy that she had accepted Harold, then she congratulated Harold, laying great stress on how proud he must be of a wife with such a beautiful complexion. Then she was readily taken about with them to play properly, which at its best is a dull game.

Madeline awaited her opportunity. Several times she almost succeeded in doing what the fairy had told her. Once in an auto ride it began to rain, but there was a top to the auto, and her scheme didn't work. But finally her time came.

They were out canoeing, Muriel, Madeline and Harold. Muriel sat facing Harold, with Madeline away off in the other end of the canoe. When they were idly drifting along a sandy shore in about four feet of water, and both Muriel and Harold busily engaged in gazing into each other's eyes, Madeline gave a sudden lurch, and over they went—"ker fop!"—right into the water.

Although Madeline could swim, she pretended to be terribly frightened, and twice she grabbed Muriel and dragged her under before Harold could get both girls on their feet and lead them ashore.

Then Madeline sat down on the shore, took down her hair and proceeded to wring the water out of it, while Harold begged Muriel over and over to tell him if she were drowned. Muriel laughed she was not drowned, but when Madeline advised her to take down her hair and dry it she refused. However, her head was so wet she could not help herself, for a large section of her raven tresses came down of itself and blew some distance away. With a great scampering, Madeline dashed it, picked it up and waved it cheerfully that Harold might see.

Then Harold took a look at Muriel.

"Horror!"

Where was his little "Snow White" now?

She was right there before him—bedraggled, her hair drying on a rock top, set away and her "snow-white" complexion still further away, mingled with the waters of the lake.

The snow-white complexion was as false as her hair, and she was a perfect fright, while Madeline, with her rosy cheeks and her golden hair flying about, looked like a mermaid.

All that night Harold had a headache trying to think of some way to break his engagement with Muriel. Finally he told her he had lost all his money, and the engagement just naturally sagged apart.

And when the next June rolled around and Madeline pranced up the altar after the ceremony as "Mrs. Harold," she said to herself:

"Do I believe in fairies?"

And in the words of the wise Confucius, she answered her own query with—"The surest thing you know!"

Another Thrilling Experience of Seldum Seezit, the King of Disguise

(Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Syndicate. All Rights Reserved.)

CHAPTER I.

"YOU sent for me?" It was our hero, Seldum Seezit, the King of Disguise, who spoke.

"Yes," responded H. M. Van Caret, the billionaire coal merchant, "pray be seated."

"I will wait myself without prayer," said our celebrated detective.

Old man Van Caret pressed a button on his desk and summoned a stenographer.

"Pearl—or, Miss Summers, take this."

The stenographer held out her hand.

"No, not take this dictation," said Van Caret.

A shade of disappointment showed in Pearl's fair face, but she produced notepad and pencil.

"John Grindem, Minertown, Pa., General Manager Van Caret Company. Add eighteen cents per ton all grades, wholesale. That's all," and as the stenographer departed Van Caret said nervously, "I must cover my losses if I am to employ you."

CHAPTER II.

"THIS is a painful subject," began Van Caret, after the stenographer had departed.

"It is concerning my wife. She—"

"Go on! such cases have happened before this," said our hero, eager for the details.

"She is acting strangely. I cannot explain as I would like to. There is no evidence, really no suspicion, but I have a sort of feeling that she has changed, that she—"

"Have no fear," said Seezit. "I understand you thoroughly. I will report to you within ninety days."

"But the utmost secrecy—" began Van Caret.

"Sir!" thundered our hero. "I am so secret about my detective work that my own wife does not know what I am doing."

"I know," said Van Caret, anxiously, "your own wife, but how about her?"

The famous detective shook his head.

"Very well, report to me within ninety days, earlier if possible, and remember, I want the whole truth, horrible as it may be."

"You shall have the truth," declared our hero, solemnly. "You shall have the truth, even if I have to manufacture it for you."

CHAPTER III.

"CLANG!"

What was that?

The dreaded ambulance gong, or the din of fire apparatus?

Yes, it might be either, but it is not. It is the silent and melancholy ash man going his early morning rounds. Knowing the family is asleep he gives the can another terrific batter, whistles shrilly, curses his faithful steed and clatters away to the next residence.

But look, emerging from the taxi! Another ash man? How grotesque, gentle reader, to see a grimy ash man stepping forth like a trust magnate or a white fighter. Has he overslept and rushed in a taxi to save his job?

It is he who was our hero in the previous chapters, Seldum Seezit. Has he failed and been reduced to collecting ashes?

How absurd. Certainly he has not. He is in disguise.

Ah hal. Is not our hero the "King of Disguise"? He is. (To the facetious computer! Do not get funny and insert a "not" after the words "he is.") He hands the genuine ash man a greenback. The CZAR OF RUSSIA—Mr. Nicholas Romanoff, widely known as the Emperor of all the Russias, never fails to shudder whenever he sees a mysterious man with three yards of whiskers carrying a round cast iron object, from which a lighted fuse is spluttering.

SALOME—This celebrated lady cannot bear the sight of a kimono. She insists that if by any chance she should wear a kimono on the stage it would spoil her act, and she is also fearful she might suffocate in such a heavy garment.

PRESIDENT TAFT—William Howard Taft, living proof that the Republican party is a large party, is sure a great mass of state documents on his desk signifies a disastrous delay in getting out to the golf field, and quite frequently his tears are well founded.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK—Widely known as a lover of nature in Summer, has a deep grounded belief that modest people should live in the South in the Winter, as all the trees in Winter have bare limbs.

MAYOR GAYNOR—New York's celebrated politician, will not work through an entire office day with the same Police Commissioner. He believes it would be a sure hoodoo.

ash man faints.

Going to the next house, which is the palatial residence of H. M. Van Caret, our hero carefully emptying the contents of the ash can over the lawn and granolithic walk.

Rummaging carefully through the debris he finally discovers a bit of paper.

It is a receipted bill!!!

CHAPTER IV.

"A H hal! A clue at last!" exclaimed our hero.

It contained the name of a certain well known business house in the great city.

He would go to this house and learn more details.

But how could he gain entrance without exciting suspicion?

Almost in a flash he evolved a splendid plan. He noticed that it was a publishing house.

Going to his desk our hero dashed off a novel. Chapter after chapter he wrote in almost feverish haste. Within two hours he had completed the novel, thirty-eight chapters in all.

Taking his manuscript, he visited the publishing house.

A shade of annoyance crossed his face as the editor grasped his hand, gave him a comfortable chair and ran hastily through the story.

A still deeper shade of annoyance crossed his otherwise mobile features when the editor accepted it and begged him to make his own terms.

But he had to do it, or else be under suspicion. Yet, he could outlive the stigma of the novel, and he managed to secure the desired information.

That evening Van Caret received a telephone call. It was from our hero.

"Instead of going to the office to-day, slam the door and go back into your library which overlooks the garden," commanded the great detective.

CHAPTER V.

A FORMAL GARDEN

In the midst, a profane fountain made of a figure of Cupid shooting darts of water into the air.

Gazing down in this peaceful scene from his library window is H. M. Van Caret.

A beautiful lady emerges from the house, goes into the garden, and scats herself beneath a catalpa tree. Fearfully she looks about, then draws from the folds of her gown a couple of small volumes, bound in oozle leather.

But see, the graven image of Cupid stirs! It emits a shrill whistle!

Mrs. Van Caret, for the beautiful lady is none other than she, looks at the fountain.

The graven image of Cupid actually whistles at her! It says: "Fair lady, what are you reading?"

With a shriek of terror Mrs. Van Caret dashes into the house, while her husband rushes into the garden, for he, too, saw the miraculous antics of the cast iron and painted Cupid of his fountain.

As Van Caret reaches the garden the Cupid steps down from the pedestal, shakes the water from his face and Van Caret recognizes our hero, Seldum Seezit!!!

"The evidence is here," said our hero, going over to where Mrs. Van Caret was sitting and pointing to two books she had been reading.

Van Caret picked them up and read their titles. They were works by Ibsen and Bernard Shaw.

"Marvelous! Heavens!" gasped the heartbroken Van Caret. "You were right; she has been reading that stuff. No wonder she is changed."

THE END.

What's Doing in Legislature and Politics

Now That Charlie Paine Has
"Landed," the "Foss Fane"
Are Hopeful.

By A. POLITICAL SHARPE.

There is hope.
Charlie Paine has landed, and the Foss Fane are beginning to see the possibility of many more of them landing in soft places before the year is over.
It is pretty generally known that the Foss Fane had begun to have hope of ever landing places on the State payroll. The Governor's apparent indifference to the loss of men who claim to have been the Democratic party alive for years has caused a great deal of grumbling. It was beginning to be whispered that the Foss Fane thought it was still a Republican and that he would appear again in the next election.

But the appointment of Judge Charles C. Paine of Hyannis to the Harbor and Land Commission has given the Democrats a new hope. It is now being said that the Foss Fane should have got the place in the first place.

One noteworthy thing about Paine. He has done things that have been a surprise to many. Most of the office-men have been looking for something they may do the party.

Donahue's Candidacy.
The "Foss Fane" are sore.

FRANK J. DONAHUE, the State House newspaperman who received the Democratic nomination in 1908 for the office of Secretary of State, has started after the popular vote for the office. Practically every Democratic member of the House and Senate has signed his name, and he has been elected. They think that he will make as good a campaign for him as the Foss Fane have made for the Democratic nominee for Governor. Some of them will do better than that.

One doesn't have to be a third-degree witness to know that the present political situation is not unrelated to the Donahue campaign. They are now all looking for a new Secretary of State, and the next Secretary of State is not likely to be a Democrat. The present political situation is not unrelated to the Donahue campaign. They are now all looking for a new Secretary of State, and the next Secretary of State is not likely to be a Democrat.

That far no other Democrat has emerged the race for this office. On the opposite end there is a third-degree witness to know that the present political situation is not unrelated to the Donahue campaign. They are now all looking for a new Secretary of State, and the next Secretary of State is not likely to be a Democrat.

Kelly, the Tax Expert.

WILLIAM GEORGE KELLY is giving the subject of taxation and tax dodging much thought. It might be said to be a good idea to employ a tax expert on the subject and one with whom all of the other members of the House are familiar.

YOU May Enter the $10,000 Proverb Contest

With as Good a Chance of Victory as Anyone Else!

Anyone who has hesitated to enter the AMERICAN'S $10,000 Proverb Contest, and is under the impression that one's chances are diminished after the contest is on, should revise his or her ideas instantly.

One of the most potent and excellent things about this contest is the rule: "Anybody may enter at any time."

There is no reason why the "early bird" in this competition should catch the worm any more easily than the later bird. For none of the solutions are to be sent in until after the last puzzle picture has been printed, and, even then, ten (10) days or two (2) weeks will be allowed for contestants to arrange and review their sets before submitting them.

When you consider that only twenty-one (21) pictures have been printed to date, you will see that there is an abundance of time for you to obtain the back numbers and have all of the puzzles solved before the time for delivering them arrives.

A full set of the back numbers of the puzzle pictures and answer blanks may be obtained by sending the regular rate for the AMERICAN to the "Proverb Contest Department, 275 Devonshire St."—Sunday back numbers are 50 (plus return postage), daily back numbers are 10 (plus return postage). You may call for them or order them by mail. Delivery will be prompt, then you may go ahead and absolutely equal footing with all other contestants.

A copy of the PROVERB BOOK which is proving to be of great aid to contestants, may be obtained by sending a money order for 25c to the "Proverb Contest Department, 275 Devonshire St."

This booklet, attractively gotten up and containing more than 3,000 proverbs, is useful as it includes all of the seventy-five (75) proverbs used in this contest.

As to the profit that is to be obtained from participating in this contest, we can only call your attention to the list of 1,000 magnificent prizes printed herewith.

You will see that in spite of the great number of these rewards, their quality is indubitable. It is the aim of the AMERICAN to spread the benefits of the Proverb Contest to every corner of the vast territory covered by this newspaper's immense circulation.

This is the material profit of the contest. But there is also wealth, pleasure and instruction to be obtained.

Those who desire further information may write to the "Proverb Contest Department, 275 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass., or telephone Main 5180 and ask for the Proverb Contest Editor.

Answers to questions—

Jesse Pomeroy's Autobiography

Life Prisoner Now Retracts His Famous Curran Murder Confession.

JESSE POMEROY, in his remarkable autobiography, two installments of which have been published in the BOSTON AMERICAN, declares in that portion of his story printed in today's issue of the paper, that he made a confession which he now retracts, and that he was not the murderer of the late Curran.

That far no other Democrat has emerged the race for this office. On the opposite end there is a third-degree witness to know that the present political situation is not unrelated to the Donahue campaign. They are now all looking for a new Secretary of State, and the next Secretary of State is not likely to be a Democrat.

TAKE AN INVENTORY OF YOURSELF

Look at This Picture for a Few Minutes,

and Then "Take an Inventory of Yourself." All of These Animals Will Be Found in Nearly Every Human Inventory.

Copyright, 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner.

STUDY yourself, your own character; ask yourself how many animals in this picture play a part in your mental make-up and which of them plays the most important part and does the most harm.

The editorial and picture were suggested by the casual remark of a young human dynamo residing in Chicago.

This young man, who has achieved great success, was asked how he explained the failure of another young man. The reply was, "He never had the nerve to take an inventory of himself, and he found he was out of the race without any warning."

There is a good, energetic, American sentence, "He never had the nerve to take an inventory of himself." You will not find that kind of a sentence in the most refined writers of essays. But you will find it a useful sentence if you can apply it to yourself, if you can really sit down for an hour this Sunday and actually take an inventory of YOUR OWN PERSONALITY, YOUR OWN CHARACTER, YOUR OWN MENTAL AND PHYSICAL STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS, YOUR OWN GOOD AND BAD PECULIARITIES, YOUR OWN TEMPERAMENT.

You know that in modern business methods, every business properly managed takes an inventory at least once a year.

The greatest concern in the world lay everything else aside at stated intervals and set heads of departments, expert bookkeepers, the best brains in the force at the great task of "getting out an inventory."

When that work is done, and not before, the man at the head of the business knows where he stands and where his business stands. He knows what has been sold, what remains unsold, what has deteriorated. He knows what his business is worth, how the period just ended compares with other periods. HE HAS TAKEN AN INVENTORY OF HIS BUSINESS, HE HAS THE BUSINESS IN HIS GRASP, AND HE STARTS FROM THAT INVENTORY WITH FRESH POWER AND FRESH KNOWLEDGE.

Why not do with your own self what the big business man does with his business?

YOUR IMPORTANT BUSINESS IS YOU. Your real life is YOU. Your future success or failure is tied up in YOU. If the head of a business needs to know just what he has on hand, just what resources he has, just where his stock has gone off in quality, just how his business is running, then all the more YOU NEED TO KNOW THOSE VERY SAME THINGS ABOUT YOURSELF.

You are a business, a money-making and success-achieving concern on a bigger or a smaller scale. You may develop into big success as other businesses have done, when properly attended, or you may drift and dwindle down in a lackadaisical way, as a majority of all businesses do.

Close down for an hour to-day, take an inventory of your own personality. Find out what you have done and left undone in the last six months, how much you have improved, if at all, how much deteriorated.

The picture on this page is a suggestion, but only one suggestion in the taking of YOUR PERSONAL INVENTORY.

You know that man stands at the head of animal life on this planet. He comforts himself with the belief—occasionally justified among very good men—that he has a soul far above the animals. Probably he has; let us hope so.

But there is not the slightest doubt whatever that he has in him many qualities that belong to the animals. If a real mental analysis were possible we dare say that in the brain of a complex man you would find something taken from the mental make-up of every animal that ever appeared on this earth, from the smallest live germ to the largest dinosaur.

Evolutionists tell you that our animal characteristics, mental and physical, were picked up during millions of years past when we used to live here in various animal forms. You are told that you get the construction of your hand from the five-toed salamander that crawled among the fern trees in the carboniferous era millions and millions of years ago. You are told that you get parts of your skeleton from the higher order of the anthropoid apes, and that your ears are put where your gills used to be in the days when you were a fish.

Believe all that or not, as you will, you cannot doubt that men contain in varying combinations the fox's cunning, the peacock's vanity, the pig's greed, the tiger's ferocity, the horse's ambition, the dog's fidelity, the snake's cold cruelty.

You know yourself how your mind changes, how to-day you feel a generous impulse and to-morrow an impulse that you would not willingly recognize as your own day after to-morrow. Whether the theory of evolution be true or not, there is no doubt that the man who does not deceive himself feels, working in his mind and his various impulses, hatreds, shortcomings, self-indulgences and weaknesses, conflicting emotions that might represent a whole menagerie of animals, big and little.

TAKE AN INVENTORY OF YOURSELF. Do it harshly, mercilessly, critically. The worst friend is the friend who flatters you, and many a man is HIS OWN worst friend.

Take the inventory of yourself as strictly and truthfully as if you were counting up papers of pins, lead pencils or the rolls of ribbon in a store.

Look over the animals in this picture, one at a time, and if you have a frank, truthful friend ask him or her to tell you honestly which of these animals are too prominent in your make-up, which figure too conspicuously in the inventory.

What about the chameleon, changing color, adapting himself to every shade of opinion? Is your mind of the chameleon type, no real color of its own?

What about the pig, whose face is simply the front door of a stomach? He does not go far in any race.

The fox, unfortunately, in our days of semi-civilization is not a bad gentleman to have mixed up in your blood and brain.

Many a man fails who might have succeeded had he had a little more of the fox. Let us not forget, however, that many a man meets failure because he has too much of the fox in him.

Look over all of these animals. The opossum, whose only weapon is to "make-believe."

The snake, representing slander and a vile tongue.

The monkey, tricky, foolish, infirm of purpose, imitative.

The sloth, lazy and looking at the world upside down.

The dog, faithful, kind, true—and very often kicked for his pains.

The tiger, cruel and cowardly.

And the peacock, blissfully happy if some body will admire his handsome feathers.

Each of us knows himself better than the world can possibly know him. Each of us deceives himself more or less the greater part of the time, and forgets the harmful truths. But we can know ourselves if we will.

Take a really truthful inventory of yourself once in a while.

You know perfectly well WHAT MAKES SUCCESS.

You do not need to read about "How To Be Successful." The way to be successful IS TO BE SUCCESSFUL, TO WORK, TO DO THE VERY THING THAT YOU KNOW THAT YOU OUGHT TO DO.

Take that inventory, take a pencil and a piece of paper and write it out. Stick it in your pocket and keep it. Make up your mind to go systematically about your work during the balance of this year.

Wipe some things out of the inventory and add to others.

The young Chicago human dynamo said that one brilliant man failed "because he did not have the nerve to take an inventory of himself."

Perhaps by taking an inventory, harsh and truthful, you may succeed.

TRY IT.
